Ritter's Critters: MISSION ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE (Night Sniper Series Book 4) Robert F. Burgess
This story begins in Dresden, Germany during a hellish three-day bombing of that city in World War II. During that time an incident occurs to a little boy named Hans Deeter that will have its effect years later on the Vietnam War.

This time that bunch of Marine misfits called Ritter's Critters are called upon to take on a mission so dangerous and so secret that none of the war's military historians will even hear about it until years later. Even the CIA who came up with the idea has no idea how it will end.

But on the super hush-hush the Critters are asked to penetrate deep into Laos to raid a long known-about prisoner-of-war-camp where a vicious commandant is vigorously torturing victims because he can. This camp is in neutral Laos, in a No Fire Zone free (supposedly) of any attack.

Ritter's Critters go in there and kick the hornet's nest. Now they can't come back the way they went and those communist hornets are about to chew up their tails while they have the lives of 80 enfeebled POWs on their hands.

How they manage it this time will have you chewing your nails to the quick. Lock and load you varmints. Hellzapoppin!
