The American Clock / The Archbishop's Ceiling Arthur Miller

These two plays, first produced in the United States in the 1970s, have recently been revived here and abroad to great critical and popular acclaim. Both had triumphant runs on London's West End in 1986-87, and the Huntington Theater Company gave The American Clock a rousing Boston premiere in the fall of 1988, and the same time that The Archbishop's Ceiling - remarkably enough - was playing to packed houses in a landmark production in Budapest. Totally different from each other in style and theme, they are eloquent testimony to the vitality and versatility of Arthur Miller's continuing output for theater.
